Neurodegenerative disorders such as Amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS), Alzheimer's disease (AD), Parkinson's disease (PD), Prion-related disorders (PrD) and Huntington's disease (HD) are a group of disorders that affect the brain and nervous system. The symptoms of these disorders can include cognitive decline, motor control problems, and mood changes. The causes of these disorders are often related to the misfolding of proteins within the brain, which can lead to the formation of abnormal structures called aggregates. Understanding the mechanisms of protein misfolding and aggregation is important for developing new therapies for these debilitating diseases.
